Dumebi: A Sound, A Statement, A Soul Unfolding

From her honest lyrics to her bold personal style, Dumebi is a young artist turning emotion into art — and making space for others to feel seen along the way.

Dumebi is a young indie rock-pop artist with a sound that's completely her own. Her music is emotional, personal, and unique — and that's exactly what makes it so powerful. She's been singing for as long as she can remember, she had wrote her first song at 12, and had started seriously focusing on songwriting at 14. At 18, she dropped her debut track, "mama's boy", a moment she says felt like the beginning of her music journey. When asked what inspires her songwriting, Dumebi shared, "I write from my own experiences and emotions. I think the best art comes from being real and honest, and that's what I try to do in every song." Her upcoming single "Skinny" (dropping May 16th!) dives into body image and self-identity. "I hope it reminds listeners that they're worthy and enough, even when things aren't perfect." Her creative process for the song was all about trusting the moment — writing what felt right without forcing it. Dumebi's biggest advice to other young creators? "Stay true to yourself and never give up on your dreams. If you have a vision, chase it with everything you've got because that dream is meant for you." Right now, she's working on multiple new projects and says she can't wait to share more soon. You can stream her music on all platforms under Dumebi and follow her on social media @melo_.mads (Twitter: @melo_mads). With a sound fans of artists like Chappell Roan will love, Dumebi is definitely one to watch — and one you'll want to follow from the very beginning.

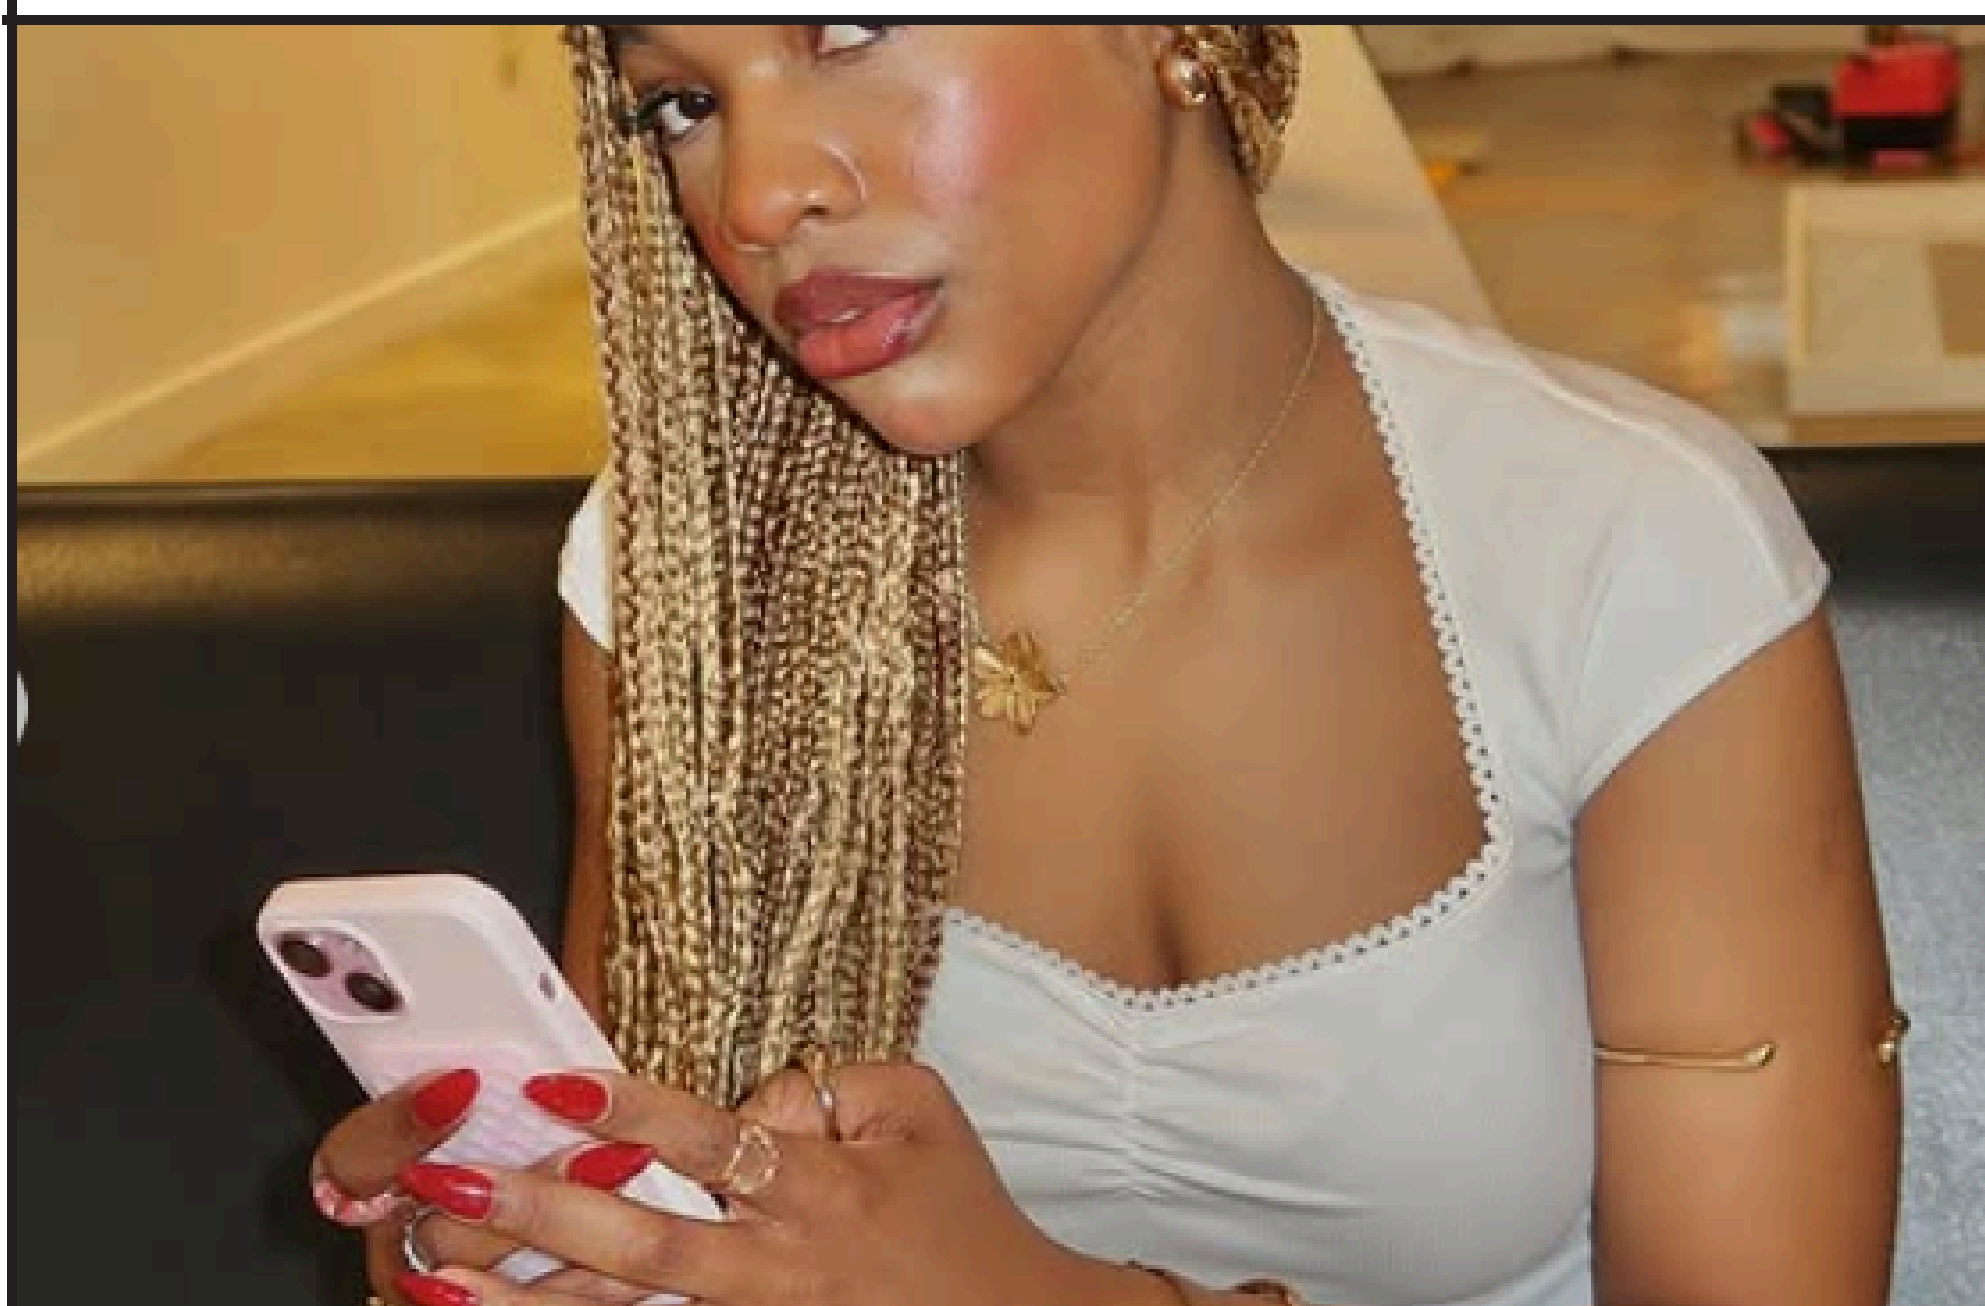

Dumebi is definitely one of those artists who makes you stop and actually listen. Every song she creates is layered with emotion, personal stories, and a sound that feels completely her own. From writing her first song at 12 to releasing her debut single Mama's Boy at 18, she's been growing as an artist who's not afraid to be honest. Her next release, Skinny, is a vulnerable take on body image and self-worth, something so many people can relate to but rarely talk about. Dumebi's not just making music—she's making people feel seen. And with even more projects in the works, there's so much more coming from her. If you haven't heard of her yet, now's the time to tune in.

Dumebi's style isn't something she just puts on—it's a reflection of who she is. "My style is just an extension of my person, it's a reflection of me," she says simply, but powerfully. Her look tells a story without needing a caption. Through every piece she wears, Dumebi blends confidence and individuality in a way that feels effortless—like her personality woven into fabric.

"My style is just an extension of my person, it's a reflection of me"

Sierra Sikora: The Sound of Her Beginning

A journey of raw emotion, unwavering truth, and a voice destined to leave its mark.

From the very beginning Sierra Sikora's journey has been full of heart, growth, and inspiration. She first fell in love with songwriting thanks to Nini, a character from High School Musical: The Musical: The Series. Starting on a ukulele, she began writing songs that felt like her own little stories. As she's grown, her love for music hasn't faded—if anything, it's grown stronger. One of her favorite parts of what she does is hearing her own songs come to life.

Whether it's producing a demo she's proud of or performing live with a crowd singing her lyrics back to her, she loves those moments that remind her she's doing what she's meant to do. Right now, Sierra's biggest dream is to go on a U.S. tour—she's started manifesting it even if it doesn't feel close yet. Recently, she's been inspired by artists like Lizzy McAlpine and Laufey, especially the soft, poetic vibes and beautiful chord progressions they bring. If you search "Sierra Sikora" on any streaming platform, you'll find her music there, and she's active on TikTok, Instagram, and YouTube as @sierrasikoramusic. With a new EP on the way, there's so much more of her story to be told.

Sierra's upcoming EP Confessions is more than just a release—it's something true that's been in the making for years. She wrote these songs during her early high school years and held onto them, waiting for the right time to let them out. That time is now. The title fits perfectly. Confessions is full of everything she never got to say out loud. Honest lyrics, beautiful melodies, and feelings that are real—this EP is her way of sharing the parts of her story she's kept quiet until now. It's the kind of project that shows just how much love, time, and growth has gone into it.

This isn't just any debut—it's the one she always imagined. Sierra says this was her first goal when she started producing music, and you can tell how much heart is in every moment of it. These songs aren't just music, they're memories. Each track holds something real from her life.

There's something special about an artist who makes music only they could create. Sierra's her own music—she's building her own sound. This EP is her voice, her truth, and her moment to show who she really is as an artist. It's raw, beautiful, and just the beginning of what's next.

There's something super special about Sierra Sikora's vibe—like the kind of artist you discover and instantly feel connected to. She's not doing music to be trendy or to fit in. She's doing it because it's a part of her. From her early days strumming a ukulele and writing songs inspired by shows she loved, to producing her own music and performing in front of real crowds, every part of her journey is filled with genuine passion and emotion. When she talks about creating music, you can tell she really means it. She doesn't just write catchy lines or surface-level lyrics—she writes what she feels. Whether that's a moment of doubt, a happy memory, or a thought she never said out loud, she finds a way to make it into something that other people can connect with. That's the kind of artist Sierra is. Honest, Personal, And really, really good. She's also not afraid of dreaming big. Going on a U.S. tour might sound far off, but that's the goal she's working toward—and based on how hard she's been working, it's not nearly impossible. Her soft, acoustic style mixed with powerful lyrics makes her stand out in a crowd. There's a calm confidence about her that makes you want to root for her every step of the way. And while she's clearly in her own lane, she's still inspired by others—like Lizzy McAlpine and Laufey, both known for their emotional depth and beautiful storytelling. It makes total sense that those artists inspire her because she's got that same energy. The kind that makes you stop and really listen.

Trinity: Music and the Art of Rebirth

Exploring the creativity that shapes her sound, one bold stroke at a time.

“I’m not making music for money or fame. I want people to feel seen”

Trinity is a teen artist blending raw emotion with alt-pop edge—and she’s not here for fame. She’s here to connect. Inspired by Billie Eilish, Olivia Rodrigo, and Tyler, the Creator, Trinity began creating music during COVID, when she realized it wasn’t just a dream—it was possible. Recently, she’s been loving Chappell Roan’s synthy style and mixing that pop with the emo energy of MCR and Pierce the Veil.

Her songwriting is deeply intuitive. “Most of my songs hit me like a random epiphany” she says. While editing lyrics takes more time, she always has a journal close when recording to help map things out. She teased that she’s “definitely dropping something soon” but we’ll just have to wait and see 🙄 she explained through her journey she’s faced racism and misogyny, but her love for music and connecting with others keeps her going.

“I’m not making music for money or fame. I want people to feel seen” she says. Favorite lyric? “I’ll be with lilies in my cold hands, I’m lost in the wind, it’s happening again, down by the lily pond.” And that’s Trinity—true, fearless, and full of heart.

Something we've noticed about Trinity is her makeup—it's not just a beauty statement, it's a story. Her looks are often filled with delicate butterflies and soft white imagery, both chosen with intention "My makeup, as you may notice, is filled with butterflies and white details, which are symbolic of new life, rebirth, and growth," she shares. These themes aren't just for show—they represent the deeper message behind her upcoming project. With every winged liner or shimmering highlight, Trinity's artistic vision shines through, blending beauty with meaning. It's not just makeup—it's a mirror of transformation.

"My makeup, as you may notice, is filled with butterflies and white details, which are symbolic of new life, rebirth, and growth,"

Soft Voice, Brave Heart

How roseli Turned Self-Doubt into Sound —and Found Her Power in the Process

roseli is one of those artists who feels familiar in the best way—like a character you once looked up to but somehow know in real life. She grew up watching icons like Hannah Montana and Mitchie Torres from Camp Rock, and somewhere between childhood daydreams and classroom song projects, a passion for music quietly rooted itself. But it wasn't until she was 18—navigating the heavy weight of self-doubt, that she really turned to songwriting. “I had this feeling in my chest and I just couldn't deal with it anymore,” she said. That emotion turned into her first song, split ends, and with it roseli discovered just how healing creating music could be. For her, music isn't about fame or image—it's about release, growth, and feeling understood.

“I had this feeling in my chest and I just couldn't deal with it anymore”

roseli's songwriting process starts off simple but open—she hums melodies and lets her voice guide the shape of the song before she ever touches an instrument. “I feel less constrained that way,” she says.

“The direction of the song can go anywhere and it feels limitless.” Her guitar steps in next, helping finalize lyrics and structure. That openness—allowing the emotion to lead instead of the structure makes her music feel real, like reading someone's diary to a melody. But being a young artist isn't always easy. She's faced self-doubt and second guessing more times than she can count. Yet Roseli doesn't let that stop her anymore. Her advice: “Don't overthink it, just do it.”

Whether it's music or something else, she believes in going for what you love—because chances missed are far worse than imperfect tries.

“Don't overthink it, just do it.”

“you never know what’s going to happen unless you try.”

roseli’s music isn’t just about sound—it’s about growth. After years of second-guessing herself, she’s learned that no one gets it right all the time, and that’s never been the point. She’s proof that chasing something, even when you’re unsure, can lead to healing. With song speculation within the next year honeymoon, and indie girl in the future, it’s clear that roseli isn’t slowing down anytime soon. But more than anything, she hopes her story encourages others to just start. “You grow with every attempt,” she says. “And you never know what’s going to happen unless you try.” Whether it’s writing a song, chasing a dream, or simply being seen, Roseli’s message stays the same: go for it—with your whole heart.
